The Origin and Progress of the Project

In 1984 the Oakham branch of the Worker's Educational Association responded to the requests of a group in Rutland for a course which would enable them to study the local history of the area from original documentary sources. A course of lectures was arranged in association with the Department of Adult Education of Leicester University which was sufficiently successful for further courses to be projected. The first course had dealt with the palaeography of documents back to the seventeenth century. As some of the students who attended this were engaged in research of their own and had already come up against the problems of medieval Latin, handwriting and contractions, they felt that a further course would provide some expertise in handling medieval material. The Oakham branch of the WEA agreed to try to arrange this and, with the assistance and support of the Department of Adult Education of Leicester University a tutor was found. This course ran during the pre-Christmas session of 1985. The tutor aimed to provide a working knowledge of various types of document and the formats and phrases most usually found in the medieval period, thus enabling the students to extract the meaning of any document they were studying. Some of the students were entirely new to the subject but they persevered. The class, whose members had become more of a cohesive group, then decided that they would like to apply their new skills to work on some particular document or documents relating to the area. Again a proposal was put to the Branch and a course arranged with, as before, the assistance of the University Department.

At once a problem arose. The number of medieval documents relating to Rutland and more specifically to the Oakham area which were available locally was very limited. However, one document preserved amongst the Finch Manuscripts at present in the Leicestershire Record Office looked promising. Its official number there is DG 7/1/12. The group agreed to tackle this and did so in the sessions of 1986/7. Very early on it became clear that a straightforward transcription or transliteration of the document would be of little service to anyone without a good knowledge of Latin for it was full of abbreviations. Fortunately for the sanity of the group there was also much repetition in the description of the various payments and services by which the different people held their lands. The document contained a wealth of information about Oakham and many places nearby at an early period for which little other information was available. It was obviously some sort of a survey and it included personal names, trades, types of land tenure, feudal services, land values and other subjects covering a wide stratum of local society. However, it was clearly not the sort of manorial survey one might have expected as it contained details of knights' fees over a wide area of Rutland and beyond. Nor did it appear to be part of an Inquisition Post Mortem. Apart from a heading 'Okeham' at the beginning it had no titling or introduction.

A proposal that this document should be made as widely available as possible grew up naturally and possible publication in some form became a desirable aim. Two problems had first to be overcome and needed to be tackled in order. First, permission to publish and second, the finding of a publisher. Mr. E. R. Hanbury of Burley-on-the-Hill very kindly and immediately wrote that he had no objection to the publication. The group is extremely grateful to him. The way was then clear to approach possible publishers. Again the group was fortunate. The Rutland Record Society generously took on board the onerous job of publication with all its attendant difficulties. The editor has borne a heavy burden. More help was offered by the Department of Adult Education of Leicester University. The group was only too conscious of the limits of its knowledge to comment on the document, none of its members being trained historians. It was essential that someone adequately expert should look over their work for errors within the limits the group set itself in writing about the document and the Department volunteered to arrange for this. To all these people and others the group expresses its most sincere thanks though, as always in such publications it must bear the final responsibility for errors and omissions. The suggestions have pointed the way to further research which would be beyond the resources and abilities of the group to carry out. For instance, detailed research on the placenames remains to be done by someone with continuous or easy access to all the English Place Name Society's volumes, the nearest set to the group involving a return journey of over one and a half hours. Much more could be said about the legal background to the various tenures and the terms in which they are described. It would be meretricious to give the impression that the group had the erudition to provide this. Nor could much more of the general historical background of the political position of Edward I at that time be included without over-running the limits, already stretched, which financial constraints put on the length of the publication. These limits were set in a number of ways. First the main object was to produce a full translation of the survey. A translation, even when the terms used were obscure, would be of more use to those interested in the history of the area than a transcription, though the latter might have more meaning to the restricted circle of expert medieval scholars. The prime aim was to help the locality and the layman. This also determined the provision of a simple glossary of those words and processes familiar enough to the expert but not to the layman as the quotation heading the glossary asserts. Indeed this theme runs through the whole publication. The commentaries deal with those aspects of the survey which interested particular members of the group. It is hoped that they also provide, as in that on knights' fees, a succinct historical background to a subject unfamiliar to most people. There is no intention to wring the document dry of its content, indeed it is hoped that other articles, such as those adumbrated above and others based on the translation will be written. To make this more possible a physical description of the document, of the contents and the method and conventions used in presenting it to the public are needed.

In any process there has to come a point when research and development must be translated into production. The group felt that it had done what lay within its competence and resources to carry out. It was time, by a publication, to hand further research over to those better equipped with knowledge and resources to carry work forward.

OAKHAM AND OUTLIERS, SOME SPECULATIVE BOUNDARIES

The Survey

Description

Amongst the Finch manuscripts deposited in the Leicestershire Record Office is call number DE 7/1/12. It consists of three skins of parchment sewn together to make a roll over six feet long (1860mm), averaging ten and a half inches wide (265mm). On one side (recto) it contains 343 lines of writing, double columned at those points where the scribe could cram two entries in on one line and on the other side (verso) it has 286 lines of writing treated in the same way. Although there are variations of ink, the document seems to be in the same hand throughout and it would appear that it has been written either all together at one time or over a very short period.

There is no heading nor is the roll endorsed with any contemporary note. The assignation of recto and verso is determined by the fact that one side of the document is written to the foot, but the other has a space of about nine inches unused at the end. In general the document deals with the details of the land and tenants of the Earldom of Cornwall (the Duchy was only created in 1337 by charter) in and around Oakham though some of the properties described in it are as far apart as Yorkshire and Huntingdon. The Oakham properties described form the manor of Oakham Lordshold, as distinct from Westminster Abbey's separate manor of Oakham Deanshold.

Towards the end of the document are given details of the knights' fees in the hundreds of the county of Rutland and elsewhere, in the midst of which the report of an inquisition about knights' fees in the hundred of Martinsley is reproduced verbatim (ll. 552-64). A later hand, probably nineteenth century, has written the date 1360 on the document and on a slip of paper filed with the roll is a note in the same hand referring, with erroneous transcriptions, to this section of the roll. The unknown writer of the note has wrongly taken the date of the inquisition to be 1360. Details of the error, which sadly misled the group until it was unearthed, are given in the commentary on the dating and purpose of the document. Once the approximate true date had been established many anomalies vanished. For instance the letter forms used were more typical of the early than the late fourteenth century; the names of the major tenants and landholders fitted better with an earlier date; the inserted documents were also nearer the earlier date.

The language is Latin with the normal use of contractions and abbreviations and suspensions, though these have caused a gender problem noted on the section on 'Working Methods and Conventions'. However there are some indications that the scribe was used to Norman French, from the numerous occasions in which he used the French definite article le as a link between name and trade, e.g. l. 027, 'Petrus le Irnemonge(r)'. There are also indications of what may be termed 'scribal fatigue' in the repetitive entries. 'And he finds one man at hay harvest or pays 1d' is repeated in full for two lines (042-043), but then becomes 'and finds as above' thereafter. Similarly those who hold on the same terms as Guy (the) Warrener (ll. 056-073) are first given as tenet et redit sicut Wydo. This soon becomes ten' et red' sicut Wydo and then falls to t' & r' sic' Wydo.

Though the Latin would bring more than a frown to the face of a classicist, and certainly a red pencil to composition expecting Ciceronian prose, the meaning is rarely in doubt, the ambiguities arising more from unfamiliarity with the non-classical vocabulary than with the grammar, as in l. 071. Even with the ambiguities and obscurities the picture of the early fourteenth century world of peasant work in Oakham and the area comes alive. Detailed consideration of this appears in the section of 'Feudal services'.

There are a number of repetitions and confusions within the document which probably reflect the way in which it was drawn up. Thus there seems to be some duplication of entries in the first forty lines, dealing with the free tenants of Oakham and those in ll. 152-169 dealing with the rental of Oakham and Egleton. Read in conjunction these may have represented a confusing picture to a scribe but would be perfectly comprehensible to those giving evidence. Anyone who has attended a village meeting where evidence, well known and understood by the body of the hall, is given to an outsider to his confusion, will be familiar with the situation. What it does suggest is that this is not a refined and honed final account, but a first draft from which, in the fullness of time, these irregularities would have been eliminated. This, of course makes the document more interesting even in its confusions at a local level. But was a revised account ever prepared? It may well not have been.

The physical condition of the document is in general good. There is little evidence of mycological damage nor has it been holed by worm. However there is some abrasion damage in parts and some discolouration which may be by water or by normal ageing. Some portions are therefore only legible under ultra-violet light which was kindly provided by the helpful staff of the Leicestershire Record Office.

Something must be said here about other sources which might help to illuminate problems. There are various documents at the Public Record Office which could be of use such as the Inquisitions Post Mortem of Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, who died in 1300 (PRO C133/95(13)); of Hugh de Audley, Earl of Gloucester, who died in 1347 (PRO C135/87, m, 29) or William de Bohun, Earl of Northampton, who died in 1361 (PRO C135/153/2). All these contain material referring to Oakham Castle if not to the town, though considerable sections of them are hardly legible. There are also records relating to that part of Oakham known as Deanshold which, as the land was held by the Abbey, form part of the archives of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. These latter are at present under examination by E. Mason and J. Donnelly (See Rutland Record No. 5 pp163-171). In the expert judgement of the Westminster archivist they are too fragile to copy electrostatically and are thus available for study only at Westminster.

At the end of our document is the final obscurity. The last line of all, 629, is a single letter, a Capital H. This looks very like the H with which, nearly two centuries later, Henry VII, would initial an account once he had examined it. It has not been possible to compare this document's 'H' with other, authenticated, examples, and it is only a single letter, standing isolated and alone but did this early draft come at some time under that financially acute eye? and if so, what did he make of it, and by what vicissitudes has it now come under ours?

MAP TO ILLUSTRATE THE SECTION ON KNIGHTS' FEES

The Dating and Purpose of the Survey

Although for ease of reference we have called this document 'A survey of Oakham' it has, in fact, no main heading, and includes places other than Oakham, scattered seemingly haphazardly round about. Our first task was to discover when and for what purpose the survey was compiled. Someone who had previously tackled the question of dating had written on the document '1360', but the type of calligraphy and the two dates given in the document made us think this was a mistake and the actual date much earlier. If the whole document was written at one time it could not be earlier than the latest date given in it, and that date (as translated into English) is 'the seventh day of August in the thirty third year of the reign of King Edward', the date on which an inquisition into the knights' fees in the hundred of Matinsley in Rutland was taken. Of the first three Edwards both Edward I and Edward III reigned for over thirty three years, Edward II coming immediately in between with just under twenty years. The year 1360 was during the reign of Edward III. It seemed as though the previous researcher had misread the two, long joined 'rr'-the abbreviation for 'regni regis' – for the three symbols 'iij', showing the number of the king. A more careful reading would have convinced him that there is no number given, making it likely that the reign of Edward I – the only Edward to date – was intended. The thirty-third year of this Edward's reign extended from 20 November 1304 to 19 November 1305, and on this reckoning the date of the inquisition, and therefore the earliest date on which the survey could have been written, is 7 August 1305.

The evidence of a second date mentioned in the document confirms a survey of around 1305 rather than 1360. This date is earlier in time but occurs later in the document; it is the date of a manumission seemingly rather artificially inserted near the end of the survey. It is 'the 16 day of January in the 25 year of the reign of King Edward', and the lord who granted the manumission is given as 'Edmund Earl of Cornwall'. If it is accepted that the reference is again to the reign of Edward I, the date would be 16 January 1297 and Edmund, the earl mentioned, the King's cousin who held extensive lands outside his earldom of Cornwall and who was indeed alive in 1297. He died in 1300, his lands in Rutland being thereafter held by his widow, the countess Margaret, until her death in the early years of Edward II's reign. Margaret, Countess of Cornwall, who held the manors of Oakham, Langham and Egleton by way of dower, is mentioned in the inquisition of 33 Edward, and other evidence confirms that she held land in Rutland in 1304-5 (VCH I, 173, 174).

Many of the people mentioned in the survey cannot now be identified, but there are a few national figures who held land in Oakham or thereabouts and rather more local people of consequence many of whom can be shown to be living in 1305 or just after. Their presence corroborates the evident date of the survey. Outstanding among the national names is that of the 'lord Robert de Bruys' (ll. 589ff.). It was exciting to discover that the famous Robert 'the Bruce' was at one time lord of Exton. He, of course, possessed extensive estates in south west Scotland, but he also inherited some English lands from his father (another Robert) who died in 1304. At this time he still professed allegiance to the English king, but after the Scottish rebellion of 1306 Edward I confiscated all Bruce's English lands. The manor of Exton, however, remained in the Bruys, or Brus, family through the Bernard who is mentioned in l. 591 (VCH II, 128.). Two further persons of renown were 'lord Guy of Warwick' (l. 559.) and 'Lord Robert de Clifford' (l. 577), both of whom took part in Edward's Scottish campaigns and were said to be present at Edward's deathbed on 7 July 1307. Guy, Earl of Warwick, overlord of considerable lands in Rutland, died in 1315; Robert de Clifford, who was slain at the battle of Bannockburn on 24 June 1314, certainly held Essendine in 1305, but was probably no longer in possession by 1308 (VCH II, 252). There is also mention in the survey of Gibert de Umfraville, Earl of Angus (l. 563). He died in 1307 just a few weeks after Edward, and was succeeded by his second son, Robert, who also fought at Bannockburn. The careers of all these persons were traced succinctly in the Dictionary of National Biography.

For information concerning the important local land holders listed in the survey we needed to search the Victoria History of the County of Rutland. Theobald de Nevill, son of Peter, the infamous forester of Rutland (VCH I, 252-3), held Braunston until about 1305 when Oliver la Zouch became the tenant of the knight's fee (VCH II, 33). Both appear in the survey (l. 359-60 and 558). William la Zouch (l. 545 and 556) held Clipsham in 1300 and later (VCH II, 41). He was probably the father of the person of the same name who later became Archbishop of York. Roger de Gyney (l. 350) held one knight's fee in Pickworth according to the survey; the Victoria County History quotes him as there in 1299, summoned to join the king against the Scots in 1301 and knighted before 1309 (VCH II, 266).

All these people were living on 7 August 1305; some of them died not many years later, though none before King Edward I. We therefore put the probable date of the survey as between 7 August 1305 and 7 July 1307, the date of Edward's death. Was it possible to be even more precise? The period of dating might be narrowed still further if it could be shown that any person mentioned in the survey died after 7 August 1305 and before July 1307. An examination of the succession of the family who held Tattershall in Lincolnshire (as well as various lands round Oakham) seemed to give the answer.

The first Robert de Tateshale, who died in 1212, was followed by five more Roberts in succession, one of whom came into possession of lands in Knossington and Wardley. The fifth Robert died in 1304 and the sixth and final Robert de Tateshall died without issue on 30 January 1306. His inheritance was divided among three of his female relations, his lands passing, therefore, to people of a different name (A. H. Thompson: Tattershall Castle. p. 5; VCH II, 54). The survey mentions Robert five times; three times straightforwardly as 'Robert de Tateshale' (ll. 353, 356 & 548), once as 'the lord Robert' (l. 549) and once (in the inquisition) as 'the heir of Robert de Tateshale' (l. 557). The inquisition uses the legal form because the last Robert was a minor and not yet formally entitled to his inheritance. He died a ward of the King, still under age and never having come into legal possession of the fifth Robert's lands.

A very narrow time-period during which the survey could have been made now emerged. It must have been drawn up after 7 August 1305, the date of the inquisition, and before 30 January 1306, the death of the last Robert de Tateshale, a period of only about six months. A further confirmation of this dating was found in the reference to Hugh de Bussey who held half a knight's fee in Thistleton (l. 600), for he, too, died in 1306 (VCH II, 155).

What could have been the purpose of the survey? Edward I was much occupied with affairs in Scotland from 1297 until his death in 1307 (he died leading a drive against the Scots), and a quickly-suggested answer was that the survey was made in order to raise money for his Scottish wars. This possibility became more of a probability when there was discovered in the Public Record Office a writ for tallage on 4 April 1305 for 'Margaret, the late wife of the late Edmund, Earl of Cornwall'. It was one of a series of writs dated between 14 March and 24 August 1305 sent to the sheriffs of a number of counties requiring various magnates to tallage their lands if these lands had been royal domain and previously subject to tallage (Cal. Close Rolls for 1302-7, p 252). Edward was already heavily in debt following his expeditions to France and his subduing of Wales, and the troubles in Scotland would have made his monetary needs especially urgent. The survey could represent the result, in services and taxation, of the assessment which he called for on Margaret's lands in Rutland and around.

If this is so, it is possible that a closer examination of that portion of the survey where the date 7 August 1305 appears could yield further information. It is an inquisition, taken before a panel of twelve jurors, into the various knights' fees in the hundred of Martinsley and gives much the same type of information as the assessments on the other hundreds, which are not set out as inquisitions. We thought it likely that on and around this date Margaret's assessors would be in the area, investigating the land holdings and services and taking their findings to the scribe who wrote them up. Very shortly afterwards all the assessments would be completed. At this time there was a slight lull in the Scottish war, which broke out with renewed intensity after the murder of Red Comyn on 10 February 1306 and the coronation of Robert Bruce at Scone on 25 March 1306. It is interesting to note that in July 1306 Edward I passed through Stretton on his last journey north (VCH I, 177 & II, 146). Would this survey of taxable Rutland then have been completed, just in time to help him with money and men?

Working Methods and Note on Conventions

So that any entry in the document may be easily and rapidly retrieved a number has been assigned to each line. There were difficulties where the document was double columned and a number of rather arbitrary decisions on numbering had to be made. Where one entry occupies more than one line the beginning of a new line in the original is indicated by a double oblique (//) assigned to the line commencing after the oblique is entered in the left hand margin. The desire to translate accurately in accordance with the text on each line has sometimes led to slightly convoluted English. An empty line is left between individual entries in the document.

As the translation was initially made in sections by various sub-groups some conventions in the translation had to be established. These are given below. In all that follows in the various lists of names and indexes, an apostrophe indicates that in the original Latin foreshortening either by the omission of some letters of their suspension has taken place.

The frequently occurring entry et fac' ij sect' is rendered as and does suit of court twice rather than and makes two suits. It may be that the restriction to making suit of court only twice implies that attendance is only needed for the twice yearly View of Frankpledge. In the translation all editorial comments or additions are enclosed in brackets ().

Amounts of cash are expressed in predecimal currency. Thus 'xiijs ivd is rendered as '13s 4d' and not as '66.6 recurring p'. In predecimal currency twelve pennies (d) made one shilling (s) and twenty shillings one pound.

Similarly the acre of the document is retained in preference to the modern hectare. A hectare is 2.4711 modern acres but the acre used in the document is presumably based on the length of measuring perch used which is given, twice, as being eighteen feet. This would give a 'document' acre nearly one and a quarter times the size of a modern acre. Interestingly this size is the same as that of the Woodland Acre used until this century in forestry management.

One major problem arose with gender. Normally dom' standing alone could be translated by the word lord which in landholding terms is genderless. The problem was cur' dom' com'. This would normally be expanded as curia domini comitis and taken as the court of the lord earl. As the lord at the time was the Countess of Cornwall this has been taken as curia domine comitis and rendered as the court of the Lady Countess.

Treatment of personal and placenames presented difficulties. Christian names presented few problems as almost all of those in the document are in use to the present day. They have therefore been rendered in their modern form. Thus Joh' has been given as John not Johannes, Ric' as Richard not Ricardus. Second names or surnames presented problems. At this date the later usage of a hereditary surname was far from fully established and trade descriptions, places of (sometimes remote) origin or family relationships were often used to identify the individual. Advice was taken from various sources and it was decided that where the text gives a trade description in Latin, it should be rendered into English. If the translation of the text is unclear, then the second name is given as it stands. Thus Joh' le Carter is given as John le Carter. While Joh' Caretar' (caretarius) is given as John (the) Carter. And Joh' Carter is given as John Carter.

Where a placename is used as a second name the conjunctive word used is invariably 'de' and this has been left, thus:-

Joh' de Langham is given as John de Langham. But Joh' Langham as John Langham.

Placenames proved equal difficulty. After academic advice it was decided to transcribe the exact spelling used in the original into the translation even when the modern place and its name could be clearly established. This would ensure consistency of treatment throughout the work. Sometimes the change from old to new is minor but consistent:- thus the modern 'Egleton' almost invariably occurs as 'Egelton' and 'Oakham' as 'Okeham'. In other cases there are slight variations of the spelling of the same placenames:- modern 'Braunston' occurs in several forms. Most of the placenames occur as second or surnames, differentiating people of the same forename from one another. There is thus an overlap between the contents of the Index of Places and the Index of Names which it seemed impossible to overcome, duplication being preferable to confusion. Where the surname place describes a topographical feature rather than a settlement it is translated, thus:-

Rob' ad barram is given as Robert at the Bar with the Latin entered in brackets.

Where there is doubt the Latin is entered in brackets after the suggested translation, with an apostrophe indicating contractions in the original.

To indicate all this a practical example is given, first as it occurs in the original and then as it is translated:-

The Property Roll, Inconsistencies and Duplications

This joint paper is based on the complementary work of the two signatories and deals with the property yields of the document. It tries first to work out the gross totals incorporated in it and then to consider the inconsistencies and duplications which occur. Taking account of these it tries to reduce the gross figure to give some idea of the real value of the earldom's holdings. It ends with some conjectures on the light the inconsistencies throw on the content and making of the document.

First, to deal with the gross figures presented. It must be remembered that the Oakham sections deal only with the earldom's holding, what came to be called Oakham Lordshold, not with the holding of Westminster Abbey, the later Deanshold, though it is true that the earldom's holdings comprised much the larger part of the town. Also, in dealing with the knights' fees, the existence of the historic county of Rutland is retained.

Oakham

The combined property roll of Oakham is recorded in a series of groups of entries covering various classes of tenant as well as the demesne lands and mills. Aggregating these the combined property roll appears to amount to :-

63 burgages	2 houses
33 cottages	20 shops
2 workshops	1 room
3 'places'	3 mills
2 courtyards	1 garden
1 wood	4,621¾ acres of land
101½ messuages

These yield a revenue of:-

Rents	£135. 7s. 5d.
Services	28. 1s. 0d.
Aid and Frankpledge	9. 13s. 4d.
Total	£173. 1s. 9d.

They are held and paid by 235 tenants (195 males, 18 females, 6 husband/wife partnerships and 16 unspecified persons), divided as:-

60 Free tenants	19 Shopkeepers
31 Bondmen	3 Former bondmen
25 Cottagers	55 Burgesses
34 Villeins	8 Others

Egleton

The combined property roll for Egleton comprises:-

46 messuages
16 cottages
1 curtilage
1 house
5 burgages
1,335 acres of land

These yield a revenue of:-

Rents and services combined	£61. 12s. 8¾d.
-----------------------------	----------------

They are held and paid by 67 tenants (46 males, 19 females and 2 unspecified), divided as:-

6 Free tenants
53 Bondmen
8 Sokemen

Langham

The combined property roll for Langham comprises:-

24 messuages	1 message/tenement
5 tenements	1 lane [leading to the mill]
4 places	1 mill
45 cottages	203 acres of land
1 croft

They yield a revenue of:-

Rents	£12. 12s. 2d.
Further value and services	52. 18s. 4d.
Total	£65. 10s. 6d.

They are held and paid by 102 tenants (82 males, 19 females and one township) divided as:-

8 Free tenants
56 Bondmen
38 Cottagers

To all these must be added the values of the knights' fees and other resources including the assarts:-

Knights' fees in Rutland	£85
Knights' fees in Leics.	17
Knights' fees in Lincoln and Yorks	46. 11s. 8d.
Knights' fees in Hunts. (Now Cambs.)	91
Knights' fees not valued but assumed to be £10 each	157. 10.
Assarts	1. 16s. 7d.
Others	6. 15s.
Total	£405. 13s. 3d.

The grand total therefore comes to:- £705. 18s. 2¾d

Even allowing for the inevitable minor inaccuracies this figure must be gravely suspect as representing the real value of the earldom's estates. In arriving at it, it is clear that the document includes many duplications not just of individual entries but of whole blocks. If there were exact duplications they would be easy to adjust but in fact many of them are partial. Sometimes names and amounts vary. Sometimes the duplications are substantial and significantly alter the rents and holdings of the tenants in the villages and of the much more valuable knights' fees. In almost all sections of the survey these repetitions abound. Only in the case of the shop rents in Oakham and virtually the whole of Langham are duplications rare. In the cases of Oakham and Egleton overlap exists in virtually every classification of tenants.

Oakham

The entries on ll. 002-040 and 152-169 and 180-197 clearly deal with the same properties and a quarter of them duplicate others. The burgages in ll. 042-055 and 198-222 show 15 duplications. Bondmen/villeins in ll. 056-119 and 256-288 have 24 duplications, the two lists often following exactly the same order of tenancies. Cottagers in ll. 126-137, 243-255 and 289-293 show nearly half the entries on the first list occurring on the other two.

Egleton

Here there is even more overlapping. In the list of bondmen in ll. 304-336, 18 occur in the list in ll. 370-392 out of a total of 23. Moreover, some of those who in the first list are stated to have, in addition to their major holdings, a cottage and are charged for it are charged again in ll. 395-400 for the cottage alone and are saddled with certain further minor services.

The Knights' Fees

Here the duplications are again considerable.

Belton and Clipsham are both valued at £10 on l. 347 and occur again on ll. 545, 547.

Braunston is valued at £15 on l. 359 and occurs again but worth £16 on l. 546.

Knossington is £10 on l. 353-355 but only £5 on l. 549.

Pickworth is £25 on ll. 350-352 but only £20 on l. 540.

Wardley is £10 on l. 356 but only £5 on l. 548

In nearly all these cases the former valuation is higher but presumably only one is charged, none of them in fact paying twice. Clearly the duplication affects the total rent toll. By how much it is difficult to say depending on which value is taken as accurate, but at least £65 is duplicated. This problem is different from that of reconciling the knights' fees themselves with the Martinsley inquisition, where values are not given. In the cases of the demesne lands, mills, profits of the court and fairs less duplication takes place. Though provision is twice made for recording some of them the amounts are only entered once, spaces are left blank in the other entry.

The Oakham overlaps suggest, in all, an over-recording by duplication of at least £30. 7s. 6d. Those for Egleton come to £1. 19s. 8d. Adding these to the knights' fees gives a total of £97. 2s. 2d. These are minimum figures and may well be considerably below the actual variations. No attempt is made here to see how the duplications affect the total quantity of land recorded or the number of tenants. Set against the gross recorded total of about £705, the discrepancy must be of the order of 15%. Even if this is two or three points out it makes a considerable difference to the value of the earldom's holdings, reducing it to about £600.

Explanations for these discrepancies have been considered by the group. It is only fair to the scribe to repeat that the survey document gives an impression of being a first draft – one which may never have been put into its final codified form. Whatever the reasons for the repetitions, anyone who has faced a gathering of village witnesses drawn from a local community to take evidence, knows the difficulties of keeping them to the point, the frequent back-trackings, the vague assertions and often deliberately misleading statements when it comes to taxation; and which require a sharpness of logic and cross checking to sift fact from hope.

That the duplications represent a separate set of dues and rents payable by some of the tenants and not by others is an argument which is difficult to sustain. Their widespread occurrence, the seeming capriciousness of who did and who did not have to pay the extra charges follows no pattern. If some of the tenants or holdings carried additional dues, it could be expected that their names would be listed in much the same order as in the main listing and that there would be no additional names present. Neither condition is met. In two cases, those of Henry of Langham (ll. 088, 093 and 279) and of Roger Wayte (ll., 094, 098 and 286) there are treble entries.

Of the suggestions have been made to explain the inconsistencies two carry more force than others. We may have a conflation of two rolls, perhaps an earlier one possibly originating from the inquiries to provide information for the Inquisition Post Mortem of Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, on his death in 1300, and a second one which must be dated to the narrow timescale between 7 August 1305 and 30 January 1306 worked out in the section on the 'Dating and Purpose of the Survey'. Alternatively we may have duplication of information arising from two or more sessions of information gathering taken at roughly the same time but in different places or from different informants who provided slightly different information on the same matters to the inquiring clerks. In either case all the information may have been included with the intention of 'sorting it all out later'. The impetus may have been the need to cobble something together in time for Edward's visit to Rutland in July 1306 to show evidence of assiduity, an assiduity overtaken by events a few months later when the news of Edward's death allowed the whole matter to be dropped and the need for reconciling differences disappeared.

Whatever the reasons, the duplications more often add to our local knowledge than detract from it, for instance in the elucidation of trades and names, even though the inconsistencies do provide intellectual problems. Perhaps, surprisingly, we would in fact be worse off if the refining and tidying up had ever taken place.

Aspects of the Knight's Fee and Holdings in Rutland

One of the terms used in the survey is that of the 'Knight's Fee'. An explanation of what this was and how it arose may be helpful to an understanding of the document.

After the Battle of Hastings, William the Conqueror needed to reward the men who had come over with him from Normandy. He also needed an army to maintain control over the country and to repel an invader. Therefore in exchange for land he required knights to serve in war.

All land was held from the king, the primary owner of all land, for a certain service indicated to the individual barons. Their future depended on William retaining the throne so they were loyal to him and he was able to impose conditions on them and so get the necessary services to secure the kingdom. It was a baron's duty to provide the service in his own way. He either hired or kept a number of knights in his own household or gave land in return for a knight's service. These knights were soldiers trained in the household of a great man to fight on horseback. In time of peace they served their lord as retainers. Probably in the early days they needed to be in constant attendance. The need for household knights continued longer in the unsettled north but foreign invasion and foreign war were always a possibility.

Young men entered the household of king or noble. Eldest sons, who inherited by primogeniture, needed to be trained in the knightly skills. Younger sons were a problem and those who did not enter the church had to look for a career where their skills in war might earn them gain or the hand of an heiress or widow.

By 1086 the original arrangements had settled down and William took homage and an oath of fealty from all men enfeoffed with more than a modest estate, establishing that he was the ultimate lord of all the land. It was now that the survey for Domesday book was undertaken and included in it were the names of holders of land, the quantity held and from whom it was held. There were about 200 barons with at least 4000 knights and with 780 knights from the English churches.

'The lands held by a great baron or an important church were collectively known as a barony, a fee or an honor. Fee means simply those lands with which the tenant, lay or ecclesiastical, is enfeoffed by the king to hold freely by definite service. Honor was a very useful collective description of estates, which, often lying widely scattered over the map of England were yet bound together by a close held feudal tie'. (Stenton, 67)

To prevent rebellion among the great men, their land holdings were not in a block in one area but spread throughout the country. One of our local baronial families, the Ferrers, held land in Berkshire, Wiltshire, Essex, Oxfordshire, Warwickshire, Lincolnshire, Buckinghamshire, Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Hampshire, Nottinghamshire, Rutland, Leicestershire, Derbyshire and Staffordshire with the main holding in the last three counties.

'It was only by insistence that the duty of attending the honor court lay on all those who held of the honor that the scattered estates of which it was composed could be kept together' (Stenton, 70). This would mean that all knights must attend at the place where the lord had his principal residence, in the case of the Ferrers at Tutbury in Staffordshire. Some men held of more than one lord and must attend several courts but they could only be the liege man of one lord, he from whom the tenant held his main residence. This led to the practice of performing the service by deputy or paying a sum of money for exemption from personal service in the king's army. Eventually, of course, knights became ill or old and could not attend personally. Later a daughter might be the heiress, unable to perform a knight's service in person.

The answer was scutage, 'shield money', a payment of money instead of performing the service. The word was in use by 1100. It was generally paid at the rate of 20/- on the knight's fee for each knight whose service was not performed in person. The king charged the lord who was authorised to collect it from his tenant. Scutage made it possible to split up a knight's fee and allow similiar pieces of land to be given to younger children or the church. For example, Braunston is held in this survey (II. 359-60) by Theobald and Thomas de Nevill, who were probably cousins (VCH II, 33, 222)

At first there is no definition of the amount of service to be given but by the middle of the twelfth century it is defined in one charter as 'if there is war he shall find for me one knight for two months, and if there is peace for forty days, doing such service as the knights of barons ought reasonably to do' (Stenton, 74). This service might be as escort to the lord and his family on their journeyings from manor to manor or garrisoning his castle. The great lord needed enough knights to perform all these duties by groups in turn.

When there were heavy expenses to meet the lord was able to take an Aid from his free tenants. The king could take an Aid from his tenants-in-chief. There was controversy about who could take what and when. By the Statute of Westminster of 1275 the king set a limit to the amount a lord could ask, 20/- for the knight's fee, or 20/- for £20 worth of land held at rent. The king forbade the taking of an Aid for the knighting of the eldest son until he should be fifteen or for the marriage of the eldest daughter until she should be seven (Stenton, 75).

'Before a son could enter upon his inheritance he must do homage for it to his lord and pay him a relief, a fine for permission to enter upon his father's lands' (ibid.). In the Charter of Liberties of 1215 it was laid down that the relief of a barony should be £100 and of a knight's fee 100/-. If the heir was under age when his father died the child was in the wardship of his lord together with his lands. These were normally used to the profit of the lord and therefore when the ward came of age and entered into his lands no relief was payable. The marriage of the heir was also in the lord's hands and could be sold if not needed by the lord for a daughter or female relative. Widows were also a source of income and had to pay to remain unmarried or marry by choice. Money must also be found for the marriage of daughters. Even those desiring a religious life must be provided with a dowry for the church. Land was the only provider of wealth and marriage the simplest way of acquiring it.

From the twelfth century there was a distinction between knighthood and the tenure of land by knight's service. Scutage enabled many men unable to fight to accept land by knight's fee, so the landless knight was employed to make war. In the thirteenth century armour became more elaborate, heavier and expensive. This in turn necessitated a heavier, more expensive horse. All of which militated against forty day amateurism.

Meanwhile the courts of shire and hundred inherited from the Anglo-Saxons needed knights to sit on their juries and run the local administration. It became more difficult to induce men to be knighted, to do the unpaid work of the courts and to purchase armour for war. Henry III issued a summons in 1234 to holders of knight's fees either to be knighted or to pay for exemption, a useful source of revenue. Eventually knighthood became a pageantry tied to the royal court. In 1311 it was found that there were no knights resident in Rutland and so on that occasion the members of parliament for Rutland were chosen from 'the more discreet and able men of the shire' (VCH I, 174).

The principal holding of land, and hence of knights' fees, in Rutland at the time of the survey was indeed that of Margaret, Countess of Cornwall. The Rutland holdings of the Honour of Cornwall then consisted of the manors of Oakham Lordshold with its castle, and of Langham and Egleton, all held in demesne, with their rents and perquisites as here extended; and the knight's fees in Belton, Braunston, Clipsham, Pickworth and Wardley in Rutland, and in Knossington, Thorpe Satchville and Twyford which, though in Leicestershire, had Oakham as their manorial centre. The Countess's Rutland Knights' fees appear three times in the survey, on one occasion rather curiously under, it seems, the heading 'Huntingdon Roll' (ll. 556-8). This apparent anomaly is not explained, but it could be the result simply of the accidental omission of a heading such as 'Oakham Soke' after l. 543.

There was another major overlordship with holdings in Rutland of almost equal importance, namely the Honour of Warwick. Indeed Oakham itself had once been part of that Honour (VCH I, 11). These holdings comprised manors in Preston and Uppingham, Ridlington and Ayston, and Martinsthorpe – these forming a solid block of land in Martinsley Hundred (ll. 558-61), as well as lands in Barrowden, North Luffenham and Cottesmore (ll. 570-1, 601), and others not named here.

Several manors are specifically held by knights' fees of the king in chief, in Great Hambleton, and Normanton (ll. 562-5), Bisbrooke (l. 567), Glaston (l. 569), and Ryhall (l. 574). The king himself holds a quarter of a knight's fee in Stretton since Aveline, the heiress of Albemarle, who had married Edmund, earl of Lancaster, the king's second son, had died childless in 1274 (VCH II, 147).

Another important landholder was Robert le Bruys, descendant of king David I of Scotland. Through the Honour of Huntingdon, he held knights' fees in Exton (ll. 591-4) and Whissendine (ll. 597-8), and himself held at least part of a knight's fee in Ashwell of the Honour of Chester (l. 589). The sub-tenant, Thomas Tuchet, was a family which had held land in Ashwell from an early date (VCH II, 108). Also part of the Honour of Huntingdon was a holding in Thistleton (l. 600), similarly occupied by a family, the Busseys, who had been in possession of the same land for several generations (VCH II, 155). The same honour had interests elsewhere in Rutland.

Robert le Bruys was crowned king of Scotland in 1306, and his lands were confiscated by Edward I, but Exton continued to be held by successive members of the Bruys or Brus family.

The Bishop of Lincoln held four manors, namely the three adjoining ones of Lyddington (where he had a palace), Caldecott and Stoke Dry, and another at Essendine in the east of the county. Only Lyddington itself seems to find no mention in the document.

The form in which the tenants of Thomas, Lord Wake, are said to have their holdings in Allesthorpe, (Burley parish), Bergh (Barrow) and Wenton (Cottesmore parish), as simply 'of the fee of Wake' (ll. 596, 602), and the reference to 'the heir of John of Wake' (l. 597), no doubt reflect the fact that this John had died in 1300, and was succeeded by his two year old son Thomas (VCH II, 158). He was descended from both Norman and Saxon stock, by the marriage of Hereward the Wake's daughter and heiress Thurfrida to a Norman knight.

Some of the barons of Norman blood who held land in Rutland were related to the royal family, either by blood or by marriage. For example, the Earl of Hereford, who held Glaston of the king (l. 569), was married to Isabella, daughter of Edward I.

Neither the overlords nor the majority of those holding knight's fees lived in Rutland but they may have spent some time each year on their manors. By 1522 of the families listed in the survey, only the Bassets were still living in their manor of North Luffenham (Cornwall, 1980). However, the Busseys still held Thistleton, and Hastings and Zouch still held land in Rutland. The Bruys holdings at Ashwell and Exton were in the hands of their descendant John Harington (Burke 1877, 425 sv Earl of Elgin and Kincardine).

The Feudal Services

At the time the document was written all land was held from the king. The person who lived on it and cultivated it was the tenant. He held that land of someone who was his lord, but ultimately even though there may have been many people in between, it was held from the king. Each tenant owed, in return for the land, some service to his lord, and each lord in his turn some service to his lord and so on up to the king.

In this document holdings are of the following kinds:- knight's fee, free tenant, burgage tenure, bond holding, cottage holding, socage and assarts. The first category is dealt with in the separate section on knights' fees, so I shall concentrate on the remainder.

Once free men had paid their rent little but an occasional service, such as attendance at the Manor Court on special occasions was expected of them. This shows clearly in the services required from the free tenants of Oakham, Egleton and Langham. The unfree, however, were another matter; they had to render numerous rents and services and often every detail of what was to be demanded of them was set out, even in the minutest fashion. In the document rent, weekwork, ploughing services, boonwork, payment for the use of the lord's mill, merchet, heriot, pannage, are all enumerated. Such tenants could also be called upon to be reeve, beadle and warrener. These obligations are detailed in the lines on Guy Warrener (ll. 056-073) and those like him.

Let us now look in more detail at the document. The free tenants normally held a messuage and between one and nine virgates, although a few held as little as a bovat. For this property they normally paid money rent, owed suit of court to the Countess and Aid to the sheriff. The rents varied widely and this presumably reflected the quality of the holders and the size of the messuages as well as the difference in the services to be rendered. In some cases instead of money, the payment could be in kind, a palfrey (l. 002) or a sparrowhawk (l. 017). Some free tenants held property which had formerly been in bond tenure but was now held freely (l. 033-036). Either this represents unrecorded manumissions or perhaps that the freeman in some way redeemed the bond services previously attached to that holding. The advantages of being free, are clear from, for example, the entries relating to Roger atte Wold (l. 604-607). The burgesses holding town properties paid rent, usually 16d, and found a man at harvest or paid 1d instead.

The bondmen are numerically the largest group. The first entry, Guy Warrener, in itself an interesting name, is extremely detailed both in the work he has to do and how much he must pay instead. The list of services he has to render occupies seventeen lines (ll. 056-073), more even than the recital of knights' fees in Martinsley (ll. 552-64). As the rent he has to pay for a messuage and a virgate is only 2s 4d while his service come to 20s 2d, most of them at a few pence each, this is not surprising.

In addition to Guy there are some 31 others who do the same or similar work. The lord can clearly call on a considerable workforce or for sums of money from his bondmen alone. William, son of Robert the Carter, also had weekwork obligations but because he was beadle had additional responsibilities (ll. 111-9). '... he shall carry letters and money at the lord's charge to his manors . . . he shall watch and ward prisoners taken within the manor . . . he shall lead them to the gallows and hang them'. One wonders how often he had to fulfill the later function in Egleton and how popular the job was.

Robert Spynk, a bondman of Langham, as beadle, also has policing responsibilities (ll. 472-9) as William, son of Robert the Carter has in Oakham. Moreover, 'he shall brew the lord's ale' The work of brewing goes on at Langham to this day, but on a somewhat larger scale and with wider distribution.

This bond property is comparable in amount with that held by some of the free tenants, but the free tenants did not owe all the services (ll. 017, 019). Free tenants who hold property which used to be bond do not pay these services either (ll. 033-036).

The cottager's services are listed with Henry of Egleton as the example (ll. 125-30). He paid rent of 12d for his cottage, a hen at Christmas, and hoed the corn probably for one day a week. He had to tend and wash the lord's sheep, gather and carry his hay and reap for one day at harvest time. He had also to attend on extra occasions 'when the lord pleases' but may then be given food and drink. He had to give tallage at Michaelmas and do suit of court. Of course 'he shall give heriot and merchet and pannage as a bondman'. He also had to grind his corn at the lord's mill. There are fourteen others who do the same.

The sokeman may be free or bond, but owe some works which again are usually discharged for some monetary payment. There are only eight of them (ll. 395-400). Assarts also brought in rent to the lord, but there is no mention of services.

It is clear from the document that nearly all the work and other services were commuted to money values. The sums totalled in Oakham:- free tenants £9. 7s. 10d., burgesses 51s, and their works 2s 8d, the bondmen assize rents of 73s 6d and their works £27. 16s. 6d. Assarts brought in rent of 34s. 7d. In l. 327 there is reference to a service, or aid, payable by the villeins of Egleton called 'sorfes'; although this payment is recorded for the hamlet in other document of the period, it has not been satisfactorily explained.

Thirteenth century writers advised the lord that hired help was better than the extraction of customary work service and in general by the beginning of the fourteenth century nearly all of them were commutable so the position here reflects contemporary economic thinking. Similarly at a higher level, hired mercenaries or professional soldiers were of more use than old, ill or unskilled knights, and knights' fees were all commuted for money payments. The situation on the land was reversed a little later when population declined and, especially after the Black Death, in the mid-fourteenth century, lords tried to go back to weekwork and other services as the labour supply of paid workers fell and wages rose. At nearby Hambleton, it is known that tofts and crofts lay vacant in the village because of the severe drop in the population which the manor suffered. It would be interesting to know what then happened in Oakham.

Names, Byenames and Trades

In 1305 the practice of double naming (fore- or Christian and sur- or second names) was embryonic. As the number of male forenames was limited a second, as it were adjectival, addition was needed to identify a particular John, William or Peter. In the document these fall into four main groups. In the first the identification is by family connexion, in the second by place of origin or dwelling, in the third by trade and in the fourth by some nickname. Taking these in order:-

Familial relationship

In this group it was most common to identify a person by referring back to the previous generation. At l. 009 is John son of Gilbert and 73 others are similarly identified either as sons or daughters. Sometimes the description is marital, l. 077 gives Emma wife of the Reeve. Sometimes it is more precise still. In 015 Avice is described as 'daughter of Thomas the draper'. Here a trade is used as well as the genealogical connexion. Sometimes the genealogy goes back more than one generation. In l. 425 is Agnes who was the wife of Robert son of Henry and on l. 427 is Alice the wife of Richard son of Simon son of Godwyn. There can have been few doubts which Alice this was amongst the seven Alices who appear in the document. Identifications as 'son of', 'daughter of' or 'wife of' are most common in the Langham entries where there are 44 out of 97 people in the document so described. In Egleton there are only 22 out of 75. In Oakham they are scarce, being used in only 17 out of the 213 names occurring. This remarkable variation emphasises the difference between the town and its neighbouring villages.

Place of Origin or Dwelling

This is by far the commonest way used in this document to identify people. No less than 253 are described as 'de' or with a placename or by a near locality such as 'at the green', 'in the lane', 'beneth-gate', 'at the stone (?quarry)'. As the gazetteer shows the places range widely, even to France and Scotland, 'the Frenchman', 'the Flemming', 'the Scot', all occur as well as various towns and villages. The local places are, of course, most numerous, villages in Rutland itself, in Leicestershire, Northamptonshire, Nottinghamshire and Huntingdonshire (now Cambridge). Some are from places no longer to be indentified with certainty. Is Henry de Gynes from Guyenne, for example?

As Oakham has fewest people defined familiarly, so it has most defined by place. As it was a successful market town it was attracting migrants who moved in with one name and then needed something more. Some 94 are defined by place as against 38 by trade and only 24 familiarly.

Trades

As might be expected these occupational surnames are almost entirely confined to Oakham. In Egleton, out of 48 separate names there are only four which assign trades; two carters, a clerk and a hunter. In the whole 98 of the Langham entries there are only three; a carter, a carpenter and a coyffester (?head-dressmaker). On the other hand Oakham has 38 people defined by 27 trades which are, alphabetically, with the numbers of each in brackets, :-

Baker (1)	Gatekeeper (1)	Skinner (1)
Barber (1)	Goldsmith (1)	Steward (1)
Beadle (1)	Hunter (1)	Smith (2)
Carter (4)	Ironmonger (1)	Tailor (1)
Chapman (1)	Merchant (1)	Tanner (2)
Clerk (3)	Miller (1)	Taverner (2)
Cooper (2)	Plumber (1)	Verderer (1)
Draper (1)	Reeve (2)	Wait (2)
Fuller (1)	Sawyer (1)	Warrener (1)

Nicknames

There are fewer of these and it may well be that some of them remain undetected or have not been interpreted correctly. Some are complimentary, some not. While William le Gode may well have lived up to his name as a good man, was Matilda Ladde in fact ugly (laide)? Was William le Long really tall? How did Robert Oldecorn get his nickname? There is scope for doubt, but enjoyment in conjecture.

So far we have looked at the second names, but they were used because of the limited number of forenames though in fact that there were more of these than might have been expected. Not many female names are available as few females held land either in their own right, or as widows or guardians for relatives who were probably still minors.

There are 67 holders of knights' fees, some of them holding very little, usually sharing perhaps half a fee with one or two others or perhaps holding quite small fractions. Some 29 hold a total of one fee or more, and 38 hold less than a whole fee. The smallest recorded is a fortieth of a fee. This would have yielded only about a sixth of a bondman's holding when his labour services are taken into account. Some 43 of the holders are indentified by a placename – 'de' – 20 of the larger holders (70%) and 30 of the minor holders (80%).

Some forenames and surnames have proved less popular than others and some have fallen out of use. Even so most of the second names of tenants and freemen in Oakham, Egleton and Langham occurring in the document can be found in any telephone book today though perhaps fewer of the holders of knights' fees. Most of the forenames are in any birth announcement column of the press. There are very few of the unusual forenames which have subsequently disappeared. Allowing for the disappearance of the conjunctive 'of', 'the', 'son of' and 'daughter of' as modern practice became established, the picture is not very different from that which exists now. Perhaps Mary, which does not appear, was considered too sacred, but where is Jane?

The Placenames in the Survey

Place names found in the survey revealed many interesting facets of the history of Oakham, its 'outliers' and related holdings. They reveal the places of origin of the tenants, both knightly and humble. This commentary, as the word implies, is a general guide to the placenames as they appear in different parts of the document. However, it is also written with the emphasis on the home 'county' of Rutland. Place name study is an involved exercise and this is not intended as an exhaustive study but as a help to students for places of individual interest.

The Christian names of many of the lesser tenants, sokeman, free tenants, cottager and villeins (serfs) are followed by locations and placenames indicating the origins of many of the later surnames which at this time were in a transitory phase. The document also gives indications of place of origin of the holders of these surnames and records land and buildings where they might have lived or which they might have held, e.g. at the Bar (gate), at the Green, at the Stone, at the Hall, at Hyde, at Syke, of Brooke, of Sutton, of Newbold, of Nevill, of Leye, of Thorpe.

Oakham

Analysis of the document reveals the names of the manor fields (e.g. Northfield, Southfield, Westfield and Manleholme) and particular locations within the town. Traces of some of these streets, mills, gardens, market and gates remain today while others are not identified even on Speed's map of 1611. Placenames appertaining to the tenants of land, messuages, cottages and shops indicate that such tenants originated from, or were resident at, villages near Oakham and also further afield. The list of shop tenants contains some twenty shops in Oakham.

Rutland Extant Villages

The names of eleven villages appear in the references to burgesses, bondmen, free tenants, cottagers and landholders on the recto of the document. The verso gives the names of a further twenty seven. Nineteen Rutland place names are given under the summary of the view of frankpledge (ll. 504-30), and many others amongst the details of knights' fees (l. 531-603). Some sixteen current place names are missing from the latter, of which three are to be found under the view of frankpledge. Most of the other missing settlement names are those of manors which were in the hands of one or other monastic or ecclesiastical overlord.

Rutland deserted and reduced medieval villages

Reference is made to Leigh (lodge) in Leye (SK 829041), Sculthorpe (SK 925028), Horn (SK 953110), Alsthorpe (SK 895119), Martinsthorpe (SK 867049), Normanton (SK 921060), Gunthorpe (SK 870056), Tolethorpe (TF 023103), Wenton (SK 885166) and Newbold (exact location unknown but almost certainly near Hambleton). Reference to Brooke may include the deserted village between the priory and Hibbet's Lodge (SK 844057) as well as the village around the church.

Abbeys, Priors and Hospitals

Religious houses and similar institutions held land in or were supported in some way by the Countess of Cornwall's holding. There are several references to St Peter, interpreted as Peterborough. Rutland is represented by the priories of Brooke and (Edith) Weston. Other priories mentioned are Chacombe (Northants.), Launde (Leics.), and New Place in Stamford. The Master of Burton (Lazars) Hospital is listed along with the Abbots of Vaudey (Near Grimsthorpe, Lincs.), and Owston (Leics.) as holding half a knight's fee in Thorpe and Twyford. The Abbot of Newby holds a knight's fee in Alyngton (i.e. Allington, Lincs.) and pays to the castle of Eye. It is assumed that Newby is Newbo, a small abbey once existing north of Grantham. This area contains the present villages of Alyngton (Allington), Berwebi (Barrowby), Harleston (Harlaxton), and Wynelsford (Wilsford). Further research could no doubt reveal other similar institutions at place names quoted with individuals, (e.g. Beauvale, Buckminster, Aldeburgh).

Mills, Fairs and Gardens

'The wind and water mills are worth yearly £8' (l. 343)

Mills are stated to be at Langham, which is specified as a windmill, and two at Oakham. It is suggested that the two mills listed in Oakham may have been the malt mill known from other sources to have been in Mill Street, and Catmose Mill, whose site may lie at Dog Kennel Spinney on the outskirts of the parish. Other items listed under the mills include 'A garden outside the castle', the Little Park, the Loundes and Cop, Flitteris (a meadow), tolls and perquisites of the Fairs, a certain custom called 'sourplus' and seventeen acres of meadow in the 'vineyard of Southdale'. It is notable that no sum is entered for a number of these which are in fact itemised and costed elsewhere in the document.

Placenames in the Rutland Hundreds

Rutland was divided into five hundreds at this time. Four of these are specified in the section of the document dealing with the knights' fees, the fifth – Oakham Soke – being specific subject of the greater part of the roll. It is possible that a heading for Oakham Soke was omitted before l. 544, for it is contradiction for its manors to be listed under the previous heading of 'Huntingdon Roll', and it seems odd that all the other hundreds should have appropriate headings.

Oakham Soke

Although there is apparently no separate entry for the hundred of Oakham Soke, nearly all the places which it contained are names. With Oakham itself, the manors of Langham and Egleton and the hamlet of Barleythorpe (Thorpe by Oakham) are extended in detail. The manors of Braunston, Belton, Clipsham and Wardley, together with Pickworth (later in East hundred) appear three times (ll. 347-61, 544-8, 556-8). On the third occasion this is in the Martinsley inquisition, but it is clear from the wording that these manors are given as part of Oakham Soke and not as part of Martinsley. The lost village of Leigh or Leye (Leigh marks the site today) is named in the view of frankpledge (ll. 507, 517). The only other settlement which is missing from the list of knights' fees is Brooke, in the hands of Augustinian canons, but it is named elsewhere (eg ll. 005, 622).

Martinsley

The Inquisition of Knights' Fees in Martinsley hundred was taken in 1305 before Robert of Flixthorpe. The witnesses originated from Buckland (various counties), Oakham, Braunston, Martinsthorpe, Hyde (Egleton), Boyville (?Beauvale Priory Notts.) St Peter (Peterborough) and Swayfield (Lincs.). First the Countess of Cornwall's holdings in Oakham Soke are given, then come seven places in Martinsley hundred. Missing from the list are Lyndon, of which the king was the overlord, Edith Weston, Manton and Wing, all with monastic overlords. However, Edith Weston does appear in the view of frankpledge (l. 512) and in the particular of the assarts (l. 626).

Wrangdyke

This entry contains the villages of Barrowden, Stoke Dry, Bisbrooke, Seaton, Glaston and North Luffenham together with a settlement called Etton whose location is not known. Some seven other hamlets or villages in this hundred are omitted from both the view of frankpledge and the list of knights' fees. Of these, Caldecott, Thorpe by Water and Lyddington belonged to the Bishop of Lincoln, and Tixover and the Abbey of Cluny, while South Luffenham, Morcott and Pilton formed part of the Honour of Warwick through the manorial centre of Barrowden. Inhabitants of Caldecott and Thorpe by Water do, however, appear in the list of assarts (ll. 616-7)

East Hundred

The list of settlements given for the East hundred comprises those in its Northern part, namely Great and Little Casterton, Empingham, Essendine, Ryhall and the now shrunken hamlet of Tolethorpe. It also includes Horn, which should be in Alstoe, and omits Pickworth which is given under Oakham Soke and three other places all in the Welland valley. Of these Ketton was held by the king, Tickencote by the Grimwald family of Huntingdonshire and Tinwell by Peterborough Abbey. Ketton however, does appear in the view of frankpledge (ll. 511,529).

Alstoe

The settlements in Alstoe hundred are almost completely listed. In addition to ten present day villages, the lost settlements of Allesthorpe or Alsthorpe in Burley parish and Wenton in Cottesmore parish are named. Only Greetham which was manorially subsidiary to Cottesmore and appears in the view of frankpledge (ll. 511, 524) and Whitwell in the hands of the Prior of St John of Jerusalem, are missing from the knights' fees. Horn, as we have seen, is given under East hundred.

Placenames outside Rutland

Free tenants, cottagers and burgesses are shown as originating from, or resident in, Hallaton, Somerby, Pickwell, Knossington, Owston, Welham, Glatton, Tilton, Burton (Lazars) and Ashby. Most of these places adjoin the Rutland boundary or are within only a few miles of it. The name thorpe may mean Barleythorpe (Oakham), Thorpe by Water (Caldecott), or Thorpe Satchville (Leics.) according to content. In the record of knights' fees a similar range of names appears, such as Launde (and its Prior), Buckminster and Appleby (Magna or Parva, Leics.). The Manumission of Roger atte Wolde refers to him as a villein of Glatton. This would appear to be the existing village in Cambridgeshire.

The Rolls of Lincoln, Huntingdon and Leicester contained on the dorse in addition to those referred to earlier under Abbeys and Priories lists Oerby (Orby, Lincs.), Aton in Yorkshire (not traced), Conyngton (Conington, Cambs.), Pertenhal (Pertenhall, Hunts.), Vade (Vaudey Abbey Lincs.), and Chacoumbe (Chacombe, N'hants).

Knights and Absentee Landlords

The title and places of origin or residence of many sub-tenants and fee-holders are spread over most of southern England and northern France. Some placenames are Anglicised from Norman origins. Identification of these would require further research and cartographical study. The names of several are familiar to students of this historic period e.g. Robert of Tattershall, the Nevilles, Mortimer, John de Montfort, the Earls of Hereford and Angus (Gilbert de Umfraville).

Gazetteer

While a section on placenames might be expected to include a selective gazetteer it has seemed better to provide a separate section giving all placenames including those used as part of a personal name. This section will be found at the end of the work together with that on personal names.

Glossary

'What words can be used which will make sense to the layman yet not upset the scholar?' H. Davis.

Aid	The king or any tenant in chief might levy a payment called an Aid on any tenant for various feudal expenses such as the knighting of the lord's eldest son or the marriage of one of the lord's daughters. (See the commentary on 'Knights' Fees'.)
Assart	Land taken into cultivation from the waste or wildwood and thereafter held in individual ownership. For this a financial recompense might be demanded by the overlord.
Assize rent	A rent of a property let out to a tenant and fixed for good, usually overtaken by inflation. Other types of rent which could be increased might be needed to make the lord's income reasonable.
Beadle	A minor court officer, usually concerned with court routine or enforcing the court's decisions.
Bailiff	An official of the lord responsible for various aspects of estate management such as rent collection, enforcement of regulations and the conduct of the court.
Bond(man)(holding)	A person or holding which had in addition to rent to supply various work services. By the date of this document most had a money equivalent which could, by agreement, be paid or demanded in lieu of that service. (See also the section on Feudal Services').
Bovate	A unit of land, an eighth of a carucate, probably equivalent to about fifteen modern acres.
Burgage	A holding of land usually found in an urban community, held in return for a money rent. It could be conveyed freely by the tenant.
Burgess	The holder of a burgage.
Carucate	Literally a 'ploughland', the largest land unit, probably equivalent to about one hundred and twenty modern acres.
Court, from three weeks to three weeks	The manor court was usually held at three-weekly intervals. Those owing 'suit of court' had a duty to attend and could be fined for default. In some cases only occasional attendance would be required. Many of the people in the document were only required to render suit of court twice a year and this may have been at the twice yearly views of frankpledge.
Curtilage	A courtyard or land attached to or immediately adjacent to a house or building.
Customary payment	A periodic payment attached to a holding, the amount of which was determined by custom.
Demesne	Land owned by the lord. Usually applied in a more restricted sense to those lands held 'in hand' and not granted out to tenants. It was on these lands that the labour services owed to the lord would have been performed.
Distrain	Seizure of goods or chattels to satisfy a debt or court penalty.
Escheat	The process of land reverting to the overlord when the tenant died without heirs or the land was forfeited for some reason.
Extent	A valuation of property.
Fair	A sort of extended market usually held only once or twice a year, not weekly, which would attract traders from a wider area.
Fee	Not a payment. Land or tenements held as a perpetual right. Thus all lands were in theory held of the crown in fee. Fee Simple was a type of legal estate in land where there was no legal superior except, in theory, the crown. Fee came to denote a major landholding but not as large as an Honour (See the commentary on 'Knights' Fees').

Finding a man	Labour services could be exercised by deputy as well as commuted for a money payment. The man 'found' is the deputy.
Frankpledge	A system of mutual surveyship by which the members of a group were made responsible for one another.
Free Tenant	A tenant who, though owing a rent, does not owe feudal dues such as Heriot and Merchet.
Heriot	A due or object payable to the overlord on the death of a tenant from the deceased's estate. It might be in money but was more usually in kind such as the deceased's best beast.
Hide	A unit of land measurement, used as an alternative to carucate depending on the locality. See Carucate.
Honour	A term used especially for a 'noble seigniorship or lordship on which less holdings depended' (Jacob's Law Dictionary). The term was usually applied to an agglomeration of holdings, e.g. The Honour of Chester, The Honour of Lancaster, the Honour usually taking its name from the administrative headquarters of the group of holdings which might be scattered widely across the country. (See the commentary on 'Knights' Fees')
Hundred	A sub-division of the shire, usually embracing several townships and standing administratively between them and the shire itself.
Increment	An increase in rent or dues, often added to the rent and the customary payment, perhaps levied for improvements to the property.
Inquisition	A word used to denote any inquiry, not necessarily concerned with wrongdoing. Often a local jury would be empanelled to ascertain and report facts, e.g. on the death of a landholder to establish landed property in an Inquisition Post Mortem.
Knight's Fee	Originally the area of landholding necessary to maintain a fully armed knight for forty days a year service for the crown. This service often became commuted for a money payment. In 1307 the amount of land constituting a knight's fee was determined to be land of the value of £20 a year and above. (For a discussion of this see the commentary on 'Knights' Fees')
Manumission	The freeing of a bondman or serf from labour or servile obligations, allowing freedom of movement, the ability to buy and sell freeholds and various legal privileges and duties.
Mark	A sum of money equivalent to 2/3 of a pound, 13 shillings and 4 pence at the time (13s. 4d.), represented by 66.6 recurring pence in present day money.
Merchet	A fee due to the overlord when the daughter of a bond or unfree man was married.
Messuage	A dwelling, sometimes with the adjacent land appropriated to the household.
Millsuit	The obligation to have your corn ground at the lord's mill.
Pannage	The pasturing of pigs usually in woodland. The sum payable to the overlord for so doing.
Perch	A measure of length or area. Various lengths of perch were in use. The document twice specifies that all measurements are made with a perch of eighteen feet length, 5.486m. Later the standard perch was five and a half yards, 5.029m.
Place	The document uses several words to denote an area near or around a house-sirculo, curia, placea. Place apparently means an open space or piece of ground with no definite use.
Rood	A measurement of land area, a quarter of an acre.
Scorfe	An extra payment levied on certain tenants, the nature of which we have not discovered but suspect to be equivalent to Aid. It is known as a local term from other early documents.
Scutage	A payment in lieu of personal military service, literally 'shield money'.

Services	Work or duties which were rendered for land held as well as, or in place of, a money rent.
Sokeman	A peasant holding land freely but usually with a money payment attached. Not liable to any feudal services such as heriot and merchet in the same way as a free tenant.
Sore sparrowhawk	A sparrowhawk in its first year.
Suit of court	See 'court'.
Tallage	'A general word for all taxes' (Coke, Insitutes). A taxation, usually ordered by the crown at irregular intervals to meet a particular need. Levied on demesnes and tenants. The value of all holdings would need to be ascertained so that the burden could be spread proportionately.
Ted	To toss and aerate the swath during haymaking.
Tenement	A holding of land, not a building at this period.
Terms, the four	The four times of the year at which payments would normally have been due. They were Christmas (25 December), Lady Day (25 March), The nativity of St John the Baptist, (24 June) sometimes referred to as Midsummer, and Michaelmas (29 September). 'Two terms', usually Christmas and St John the Baptist or Lady Day and Michaelmas.
Township	The territory or district population of a town. At this period the term used for township, 'villata', could designate quite a small settlement of perhaps only village size.
Villein	A peasant holding land from the lord, not a freeholder, and so owing some services as well as rent and other payment, used in the survey as an equivalent to bondmen. Bound to the lord as a member of the manor, owing suit of court and feudal dues such as heriot and merchet and labour services.
Virgate	An area of land, a quarter of a carucate. Perhaps equivalent to about 30 modern acres, though it seems to have been less in some parts of Leicestershire. At Kibworth Harcourt it was only about 15 acres.
Warrener	The official in charge of the rabbit warrens. At this period rabbits were a luxury food, the value of a rabbit being approximately equal to about two days normal pay for a labourer.
Will, holding at	Holding for an period which depended on the will of the overlord, but generally protected from arbitrary ejection by the strength of the custom of the area.
Works	Labour services by which land was held.

Index of Places

The difficulties of providing this have been touched on in the section on 'Working methods and Conventions'. As the spellings in the original document are preserved in the translation the layout of this Index is as follows:-

First the placenames as it occurs in the original is given. This is followed by the line numbers where the name occurs. If the placename is used as a personal name, then the line numbers on which this occurs are indicated by an asterisk. Then comes the modern form of the name where it has been possible to ascertain it, and finally the county. As the document itself deals with the historic counties of e.g. Rutland, Huntingdonshire and Yorkshire, these are used with their present counties in brackets using the usual abbreviations. Thus 'Rutland' is given as 'Rut. (Leics.)' and 'Huntingdonshire' as 'Hunts. (Cambs.)'. If the modern placename occurs in more than one county, this is entered as 'Var'.

Where the spelling of a name in the original varies by only a letter or so, the variants are indicated by brackets, thus 'Burle' also occurs as 'Burghle' and 'Burley', this is indicated by 'Bur(gh)le(y)', or by an oblique – 'Glatton/Gletton'.

Index of Names

As the modern system of surnames was not yet developed the provision of a name index in a modern idiom has proved difficult. Everyone who is named in the Survey appears in the index in one form or another but reference to the text from the line number is essential. Minor variations of spelling where it may be reasonably assumed that the same person or name is meant are treated in the same way as similar variations in the Places Index.

In this index an asterisk () attached to someone indicates that it may not be a 'true' surname as is now understood. Space, and the financial costs involved, have prevented the inclusion of the family and other relationships which served instead of surnames. These are in the asterisk category. Thus 'Richard son of Alice' is shown as 'Alice, Richard' with the appropriate line number. Where a place of origin defines a person, the place is considered as a 'true' surname. Thus 'Geoffrey de Appelby' is shown as 'Appelby, Geoffrey' again with the line number. Similarly a trade description is considered as a 'true' surname. 'Peter the Baker' is shown as 'Baker, Peter' with the line number.

One or two people, such as Guy the Warrener, are used in the document as exemplars and numerous people are said to 'hold and pay as Guy'. In these cases a further line number for Guy is not given. The only other omissions are unnamed office holders such as abbots and priors where a personal name is not given. Finally there are those cases where a minor, local, place is used as 'in the lane', 'at the gate', 'at the bar'. These are treated as being not 'true' surnames. 'Nicholas at the Bar' is shown as 'Bar*, Nicholas' with the line number:-
